

Websites that Interest Guys Like Me

All day long I work with computers and computer experts. I have been a computer expert for many years. You might believe that after many years of dealing with technology, I might get almost “bored” with the Internet. But really, I’m just like you, in that the websites that I browse are many and varied. Try some of these sites:

<http://nickciske.com/tools/binary.php>

This website will convert any word or name to binary or hexadecimal. So now we know that my name in binary is 01110110011001010111001001101110, and in hexadecimal it is 7665726E00.

This is my buddy Tyson’s band’s website. Other notable people in the band are Mike Dodd, Adam Perrin, and a couple other people I don’t know. (Sorry Tonye and Warren) Anyway, check it out - it’s a good local page.

<http://www.hgtv.com>

You might not know it to see me but my favorite TV channel is, without a doubt, HGTV. I am constantly checking their website for how-to information whether it’s painting or making a good butt joint.

<http://www.ask.com>

Formerly known as Ask Jeeves.com. This is an excellent website for finding relevant websites that can answer many of the research questions that I have.

<http://www.softemp.ca>

I would be remiss if I didn’t encourage you to check out our store’s website. Alternatively, you can go to www.softwareemporium.ca and get to the same website.

<http://www.zdnet.com>

Want to know which is the best digital camera on the market today? Want to know whether the Service Pack 2 (SP2) of Windows XP is any good? Please go to ZDnet.com and check it out. I especially like to use the Reviews section when researching Technology Product. I encourage you to do likewise when purchasing any new “gadget”.

I use this almost daily. Whenever I want to know the definition or spelling of any word, whenever someone uses a word incorrectly, whenever someone mispronounces a word, this is where I go. Here at Software Emporium we have a tradition of picking a “word-of-the-day”. We look up the meaning, discuss it and then use it throughout the day.
